his most recent book is an anthology of the writings of the Australian philosopher David Stove titled Against the Idols of the Age (Transaction, 1999)

The corrosive trivialization of culture
Roger Kimball
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 78-85

Books and articles of academic interest
William C. Dowling
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 97-97

Enemies of promise: Why America needs the SAT
William C. Dowling
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 6-24

A defense of popular culture
Mary F. Nichols
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 73-78

The philosophy of the faculty
Robert Brustein
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 47-52

The tyranny of the near-at-hand
Sanford Pinsker
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 85-89

The issue at a glance
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 3-4

Variations on àP.C.â in the movies
John Simon
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 66-72

Revising the museum
Lynne Munson
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 52-59

Introduction a beacon in the new historicist fog
Herbert London
Academic Questions > 2000 > 13 > 1 > 25-26

Reviews
Jeffrey J. Poelvoorde, J. Daryl Charles
His most recent book is an anthology of the writings of the Australian philosopher David Stove titled Against the Idols of the Age (Transaction, 1999)
David Charles Stove (15 September 1927 – 2 June 1994), was an Australian philosopher. His work in philosophy of science included criticisms of David Hume's Inductive scepticism, as well as what he regarded as the irrationalism of Karl Popper, Thomas Kuhn, Imre Lakatos, and Paul Feyerabend. He offered a positive response to the problem of induction in his 1986 work, The Rationality of Induction. Stove was also a critic of Idealism and sociobiology, describing the latter as a new religion in which genes...